OVERWATCH! Name: Valeria Gender: Woman Age: 24 Occupation: Amazons' Conquest Captain
Introduction Hello! My name is Valeria. I am 24 years old, and my name means "valiant". I am proud to serve in the Amazons' Conquest Captain's Company, the second Amazon unit in the Lustria war effort. We are so loyal to Nuffle, and his Son, Ares. We will protect Nuffle's shtick of "the Greatest Planet in the World", and if it were of any other planet, he would have already been executed. I am the first woman to hold this position in my unit. In my opinion, the fear and terror I have had to endure because of it is worth it because of all the amazing and very useful things I have been given. And my skills as a Conqueror I have also been given, and they have proved to be a gift from the Gods. We are so lucky to be part of Nuffle's army. We do all we can to be as ready and prepared for every battle as we can be. I mean that the God incarnate, Ares, himself is also an armoured behemoth, and so we know that victory is in our grasp. We know Nuffle is so powerful, that we almost certainly will get to stop those who would do him harm. And then we look forward to it and work even harder to stop them. I believe we are the only fully female team in Nuffle's army because we are so loyal, so we have everything to gain and nothing to lose. It is therefore vital that we excel at our jobs, be professional, and stay focused at all times. Because we represent our unit, the Amazons, so well, it is of utmost importance that you respect us, no matter what the situation. Also, don't mess with us in training, because you really could get hurt. Having said all that, it is time for the introduction of your first newly-raised Blood Bowl team, and Amazons are of course notorious for our prowess as Conquerors. So be prepared to see a lot of action, and as I tell my subordinates "don't let your legs get too cold"

What's new in Das Geisterschiff Remixed:

That Wealth Doesn't Matter Berkeley minister Joan Borysenko says that if everyone had a little money to create opportunity for themselves, the world would be a very different place. Most of us know that money has an impact, but we mostly assume that if you're poor, having more money isn't a relevant priority. Not only is it a lie, but wealth is also a limiting factor that hinders people's success. "It turns out you can only get when you have enough money—that's why so many people's conscious leans toward money," shares Joan Borysenko. "To people who don't have it, it is the highest law on earth!" What may be surprising, however, is that even if they have money or resources, they may still not be happy with what they have. A study done in 2007 revealed that more than half of the adults in the U.S. agreed that being rich was worth a lot more than being happy, and only 41% of people that had more than $75,000 a year agreed that being rich was worth more than being happy. Both of those figures are significantly lower than in the 1950s when comparing rich and happy. Sadly, people's wealth comes with a lot of things. For the most part, the top 20% of earners now have 73% of the country's total wealth. And 58% of the population have no money at all. Both of those numbers have increased since 1980, according to a report from the Federal Reserve. "There are lots of obstacles, of course. The more you have, the harder it is to attain," Borysenko explains. "The other hundred percent do not have the right financial structures. Because where you might have felt the pinch when you were at your worst, now you might survive." This kind of thinking is ingrained in most people by how the world is structured. After all, we believe we're born to fit into the world in some way. When you're poor, you may have to take jobs that don't offer health insurance or a pension, let alone believe that you can have your own assets. It definitely won't make you feel happy about your current situation. Not Everyone Has That Scratch "But suddenly, in

Africa's largest nation is one that spans 30% of the continent's land mass. Bordered by the Atlantic to the west, Western Europe to the north, and the arid Sahel to the east, Nigeria is a geostrategically strategic nation that spans the Niger Delta to the Atlantic Coast to the north and the Sahel to the east. The Biafran War, also known as Nigeria's Civil War, was a secessionist conflict fought between the biafrans, a predominantly Christian group representing the minority Igbo ethnicity, and the federal government of Nigeria between 1967 and 1970. The biafrans were largely defeated by overwhelming federal military force. Today, it is Nigeria's largest oil producer and is often ranked as the 34th most populous nation in the world, as well as being the most populous African nation and the sixth most populous country in the African continent. Nigeria was a British protectorate for more than a century, and continued to be a British protectorate until 1960. Ethnic tensions leading to the civil war began in 1946, when the colonial government pushed for a return to the pre-British empire ethnic balance of the 19th century. The British colonial and post-colonial governments were often accused of introducing indirect policies of ethnic discrimination in areas of the country containing the Igbo in favor of the established Eastern Niger Delta tribes in order to consolidate the power of the Egba and other dominant tribes. The Yoruba, the dominant tribe in what is now southwestern Nigeria, benefitted from these policies in the Delta. In 1961, the colonial government instituted an anti-Igbo policy in the eastern region that led to the growing opposition of the Igbo. After 1965, large scale killings of Igbo people began and the federal government enforced actions to disarm the Igbo forces. The division caused by the 1963-1967 Biafra War, and multiple
